Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD.
Boston, Nov. 24.—In the appeal for new trials for Sacco and Vanzetti, Italian radicals, convicted of holdup and murder at South Braintree in April, 1920, and whose cases have been seized upon by the Third International throughout the world, there are two points upon which the defense hopes for victory. These are: That the State's charge, that Sacco and Vanzetti showed "consciousness of guilt" when arrested was far fetched and not sustained and outside all justice. That there was irregularity in the jury room and in the District Attorney's office in the handling of the revolver, cartridge and discharged cartridge caps with which the killing was alleged to have been done. In his closing argument for the prosecution, District Attorney Frederick Katzmann said to the jury: "Consciousness of guilt was apparent in the lies to the police and to me which Sacco and Vanzetti told when they were arrested."

Arranging Red Protest.

The two Italians were arrested at night on May 5, 1920, on a street car in Brockton while they were engaged in arranging a mass meeting to protest against the death of Andrea Valsedo, radical, who had jumped to his death from the fourteenth floor of the Park Row Building, New York city.

Sacco and Vanzetti say that at the Brockton police station they were questioned closely on their political beliefs. The defense now sets up that their political views should have had no bearing on the murder case. This is cited in pamphlets issued in the effort to prove that the Italian labor agitators were arrested and framed because they were radicals. Says one pamphlet:

"The prisoners did what all wise workers do when placed under arrest. They refused to give any definite information about where they had been or whom they had seen, fearing that if they did so it would only reveal the names of their comrades who would then be subject to prosecution. Later they explained why they lied about their movements when arrested.

"They explained they were afraid to tell why they had been out with Mike Boda that night because they thought they had been arrested as radicals." Boda was arrested as a suspect in the case but escaped and is supposed to have gone to Italy and led the uprising there over the Sacco-Vanzetti case. The pamphlet continues:

"Their going with Boda in an automobile was in accordance with a plan to gather up radical literature in the hands of their friends until the cry in America against radicals should blow over. Michael Stewart, police chief in Bridgewater, joined the police inquisition at Brockton, and later as a principal witness against Vanzetti testified that Vanzetti was in favor of changing the Government by force if necessary. This was one of the State's strongest points.

Accuse the Police.

"None of the bandits who had terrorized Bridgewater and Braintree in a series of holdups had been caught. The police had fallen down. That was a sore spot with Stewart. The crimes had been committed by 'dark men' presumed to be foreigners. One 'top' would pass for another anyway, and so the Braintree murder was fastened on Sacco and Vanzetti because they were radicals being hunted by the Department of Justice.

"Chief Stewart had Boda in his hands on April 20, five days after the murder, and let him go. On the same day the man with whom Boda lived, Peruccio Coacci, was deported by the Federal authorities without protest from the State Department. Sacco and Vanzetti showed 'consciousness of guilt' because they knew the Federal Government was prosecuting all draft dodgers who might be deported. But that had nothing to do with the charge of murder, the penalty for which is to walk through the little green door in the Dedham jail to the electric chair."

Charges Against Jury.

Further, the defense charges irregularities in the jury room which alone should justify a new trial. Walter Ripley, foreman of the jury, who dropped dead a few weeks after the trial, possessed a revolver identical with that alleged to have been found on Vanzetti and with which the murder was said to have been committed.

When Ripley went into the jury room he found in his vest pocket some of the cartridges which fitted his revolver at home. The cartridges were the same as those found on Vanzetti. It is charged that the Ripley and Vanzetti cartridges were compared and became mixed. All-davis charge that Ripley's cartridges, which were never exhibited to the jury, were marked on the caps and were used as part of the exhibits before the jury.

The weapons and bullets taken from both Sacco and Vanzetti were never impounded and, the defense claims, passed through the hands of the police, State police and District Attorney's office for months before the trial. There was much conflicting evidence by experts on guns at the trial and the defense sets up that the State failed to identify the weapons taken from the prisoners as those from which the shots were fired in Braintree, and also that the State did not even prove that the murder was committed with the same kind of weapons as those taken from the prisoners.

REDS WILL MEET HERE TO PLAN LABOR REVOLT

Russians Back 'Underground'
Gatherings Sunday.

Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD.
Chicago, Nov. 24.—Communist international headquarters in Russia is backing the "underground" Communist effort to make capital out of the Sacco-Vanzetti protest meetings on Sunday throughout the United States, according to Federal authorities closely in touch with Communist plans for the demonstration to be held here.

The next big move, according to informed in the hands of officials, is the organization of an American revolutionary labor party, through which the "underground" Communist party will operate. That the movement for this group is well organized is evidenced, Federal agents say, by publicity matter obtained by them concerning the organization of the new party at a meeting in New York city to be held December 23.

The Communist statement says that "more than twelve labor organizations, representing about 50,000 persons, will meet Christmas to give birth to the American revolutionary labor party. This gathering will be the first significant expression of effort to unite all the elements which broke away or were expelled from the Socialist party during the last three years."

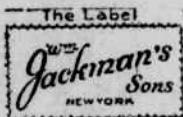

SAYS 'CASTLE OF LIES' WAS FRAMED BY POLICE

Italian Committee Asserts No
Witness Was Sure.

Rome, Nov. 24.—Replying to a statement issued by Richard Washburn Child, the American Ambassador, that the case of Sacco and Vanzetti was outside the jurisdiction of the American Federal Government, the national committee formed recently to fight for their freedom issued a statement to-day declaring they were convicted on insufficient evidence.

The statement, which was published prominently by all the newspapers in Rome, declared there was "not one witness who was sure and decisive" in the trial of the two men, who were convicted last summer of murder by a Massachusetts court. "The castle of lies of the American police," continues the statement, "will fall like the famous castle of paper. The workmen of the world are following the case of Sacco and Vanzetti, and await to see them restored to liberty and to see justice done."
